THESE ARE MY PEOPLE

"Growing up in a small town in the heartland of America, I was surrounded by people who were more than just neighbors. They were my extended family, my community, and my people. We shared the same values, traditions, and way of living. We celebrated together in times of joy, supported each other in times of sadness, and worked together for the progress of our community.

Our connection was not just geographical; it was emotional and spiritual. These were my people, and I was theirs. As I grew older and moved away, I realized that 'my people' were not just limited to my small town. They were everywhere. They were the people who shared my values, my passions, and my dreams.

They were the people who inspired me, questioned me, and helped me grow. They were the people who made me feel at home, no matter where I was. These are my people."

Sincerely,

Judy Stein
